

LONDON SCHOOL OF ECONOMICS & POLITICAL SCIENCE, VARIOUS PROJECTS, LONDON

The practice has carried out two projects for the LSE.

In 1997 it completed a project for a new 24-hour computer facility in the Clare Market building, which included 105 workstations. The facility cost £250,000 and opened 20 weeks after the practice was appointed to carry out the project.

In Autumn 2001 the practice was appointed to carry out the new Social Sciences Research Laboratories, which are housed in the Old Building in Houghton Street. This was preceded by a feasibility study into the possible relocation of catering facilities to make way for new accommodation.

The project includes 45 workstations for both research officers and students, together with meeting rooms and discussion areas, as well as the provision of new services.

Left: social science research laboratories, Houghton Street
Below, far left: meeting room, Houghton Street
Below, left: break-out space, Houghton Street

London School of Economics & Political Science
560 m²
£750,000
2001-2002